A stunning New Democratic Party victory Wednesday ended the Bennett era of British Columbia government and ushered in what NDP premier-elect Dave Barrett called "the people's century."

With 39 per cent of the popular vote, the NDP won 38 seats, reducing Social Credit to the official opposition with 10 seats.

When Barrett is sworn in as premier next month it will mean that all provinces west of Ontario except Alberta will have NDP governments.

Social Credit held power in the two western provinces but lost Alberta to the Tories on Aug. 30. 1971, and lost B.C. to the New Democrats on Wednesday.

Result Called Protest

OTTAWA (CP) - Political observers here regard the New Democrat upset victory in the British Columbia provincial election Wednesday night mainly as a protest against the 20-year Social Credit government.

It is expected to have little effect on the federal Liberal government's political plans which are generally thought to include a federal election call for Oct. 30 or Nov. 6.

The decisive win by provincial NDP leader Dave Barrett and his party surprised spokesmen for both the federal New Democratic Party and the Conservatives.

Prime Minister Trudeau, however, shrugged off the possibility of any ominous portents in the upset.

"If the trend is toward voting leaders out of office who have been around 20 years, I don't have anything to worry about yet," Trudeau

Joke's on Business, Laughs Anderson

CEEMENT CHAPPLE Times Staff

The "joke of the year" is on the businessmen of B.C. who backed the Progressive Conservative party and gave the New Democratic Party an election victory, Liberal lead David Anderson said Wednesday night.

Anderson said he had been predicting all along that the Conservative effort would split the vote and make it possible for the NDP to win the election with a small percent age of the popular vote.

But at a victory party for his own win later at the Empress, the Liberal leader said "I believe we have seen" the end of the Tories."

As the returns began to indicate the NDP sweep, Ander-son said he had expected the NDP to be "high" in votes, but not as high as the result.

Anderson said a main thrust of his campaign, which kept him away from his riding in Victoria and almost cost him the seat, was to try to per suade people not to vote PC because this would result in an NDP win.

It was the fulfillment of a dream for the pudgy, pugnacious leader of the New Democratic Party.

The beer-drinking political brawler who tormented the Social Credit party from the time he entered the legislature in 1960 after a stormy career as a social worker, finally succeeded by maintaining a low profile in the election campaign.

Refusing to rise to the barbs from the other three parties, who called him everything from "a traitor to the people" to "the most dangerous leader the NDP has ever had," Mr. Barrett stuck to the issues, promising repeal of labor legisla-

Out of a job, Mr. Barrett went to the big push, the wheel, of the CCF locally" and told him he wanted to become an MLA. He was nominated in the old Dewdney riding, ran in the 1960 election and won by 2,000 votes. The riding was split two elections later, in 1966, and Mr. Barrett won in the Coquitlam half, and in the 1969 election he won by the biggest plurality of the 12 NPP winners - 4,733.

This time, he won by more than 10,000 votes.

The way was open for Mr. Barret to take over, by default, as NDP leader.

In the legislature, he aroused the wrath of Premier Bennett with his impersonations of the Social Credit leader. He once moved the premier to apoplectic fury when he asked Atforney-General Leslie Peterson the same question 66 times in

Among his election promises which are certain to be implemented when the legislature is called into session is one which promised a government car insurance plan, along the lines of the Saskatchewan government scheme.

The election-campaign act, Mr. Barrett said, would include measures requiring full disclosure of campaign funds, both on the party level and for individual candidates.

Also high on the list are some repeals of existing legislation — including Bill Three, which limits teachers' salary increases, and the compulsory arbitration of the Mediation

Mr. Barrett has kept big labor at arm's length since he became leader of the NDP.

One reason for keeping labor and the party separate was his feeling that the NDP could never succeed if it was tied.

too closely to labor. Another factor has been Mr. Barrett's displeasure after the labor bosses pushed Tom Berger past him in the 1968 leadership race.

New Deck, New Deal

The twenty-year reign of Social Credit in British Columbia has ended in an upset which stunned even the NDP winners. There may be a tinge of regret on all sides that Mr. Bennett's unprecedented tenure should end in so brutai a fashion, with all but three minor cabinet ministers wiped out and the Social Credit ranks reduced to ten from the 38 elected in 1969.

But the aging ex-premier has, as he points out, the satisfaction of his past achievements. He has, too, a veteran politician's fortitude to endure defeat when at last it came. It is not likely that Mr. Bennett, despite his personal victory in South Okanagan, will choose to linger in the opposition benches. In a way, it would hardly be fitting to see him so humbled.

To NDP Leader Barrett a vast opportunity is now open. He has succeeded in doing what his predecessors failed to do in spite of 20 years of effort. His victory, an overwhelming 38 seats in the House, leaves him free to initiate the many policies he has espoused. As Mr. Bennett points out, he inherits a province in good financial condition on which to base his programs, but it will be interesting to see how much his policies must be re-shaped by the heavy hammer of economics on the hard anvil of political expediency.

Preliminary figures indicate a gain of only about five percentage points in the total NDP vote. about 39 per cent compared with 34 in 1969. On the other hand Social Credit dropped from about 47 per cent of the vote to 32 per cent: the Liberals from 19 per cent to 16; while the Conservatives picked up 13 per cent compared with a negligible fraction in 1969. The NDP, always a potential threat to the Social Credit government, gained votes in the constituencies where even a small increase would be most effective.

There are numerous factors to explain the Social Credit losses. The Conservatives obviously subtracted more votes from the Social Credit totals than the NDP did, and to this extent Mr. Bennett's warning against splitting the non-Socialist vote was valid. The "time for a change" argument no doubt was effective in many quarters, as was the mounting burden of public dissatisfaction with various government policies - environment, education, hospitals, to name a few. It is clear, too, that the unseemly, eleventh-hour squabble among Mr. Bennett's own cabinet colleagues regarding the future leadership of the party contributed to the defeat, and it was poetic justice that the cabinet ministers who allowed their names to become involved in the matter were eliminated to a man.

Even for strongly anti-NDP voters, there is some consolation in knowing that one or two ministers who long have been an embarrassment to the province and, indeed, to the government, will not be around any more. On the other hand, there are some who made a real contribution to provincial affairs, and they will be missed,

The victories of Mayor Curtis and Liberal Leader Anderson are welcome. They should make their presence felt in the Legislature even if their debating attacks are launched from small beachheads, It is unfortunate that Conservative Leader Warren cannot join them. One of the outstanding wins of the campaign was by Conservative Dr. Wallace in Oak Bay, the outspoken, independent-minded former Social Crediter whose election confirms that it was the man and not the party who held the attraction for voter's in that constituency.

It is exactly a year since Social Credit fell in Alberta after a generation in office. The NDP win in British Columbia follows similar leftist victories in Manitoba and Saskatchewan within the last three years. Yesterday's results have apparently squelched along with Social Credit's future any return march of Conservatism in provincial politics in the West beyond the Alberta salient. But, on the other hand, they opened up new visions for the NDP which Mr. Barrett's performance over the next three or four years will make brighter or dimmer.

The people have given him his chance to take over a province in which a great deal of socialism is already incorporated - a province, indeed, which has stolen much of the socialist thunder which his predecessors produced in their time. We wish him well in his efforts to work for the good of British Columbia. He will be performing on a closely watched, well lighted stage.

MAURICE WESTERN

No Shiny New Personalities

Parliament to deal with the West Coast dock strike will obviously delay dissolution but may not radically alter the prime minister's election plans.

Whatever the date finally chosen, the campaign will not and cannot be a repetition of 1968. Quite apart from such political changes as may have occurred, the situation today is quite different and, in the Canadian context, more normal.

The election of June 25, 1968, was unusual because of the emergency, in the immediate prelude, of two personalities, each commanding a major party and each new to federal politics at the highest level.

It was this clash of relative unknowns which generated a good deal of the political interest evident four years ago and which also gave the 1968 campaign something of a presidential flavor. For, in fact, such confrontations of newcom ers are rare in Canada - we have had only three in 28 elections -although much commoner in the United States, partly because of the two-term limitation broken only by Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Canadian Continuity

There is a continuity in our annals not found in the American record. It was in fact unbroken in our first 53 years, for no election in that entire period was monopolized by newly chosen leaders. Throughout the Macdonald era, changes occurred only on the Liberal side. It was the old veteran versus Mackenzie, or versus Blake or versus Laurier. Then it was Laurier versus Tupper or four times against Borden. Then veteran against veteran, Borden challenged by Laurier The first break occurred in 1921, by chance a year of turmoil marked by a temporary breakdown of the two-party system. Two relatively young men, a bit younger than the rivals of 1968, Mackenzie King and Arthur Meighen, contended for the first time in their famous duel. convention, then a novelty in Canada although accepted in the United States. Even so, the parties were cautious; if they campaigned under new commanders they had at least the assurance that both had been federal ministers and were reasonably familiar figures in the While Mr. King dominated Canadian politics, the only changes were on the Conservative side as Meighen gave place to Bennett, Bennett to Manion, and so on to the last contender, John Bracken. Only in 1949 when Louis St. Laurent faced George Drew was there a second break. But again it was blurred somewhat, since Mr. St. Laurent, a key federal minister since 1941, was - if not the anointed - at least the expected successor to Mr. King.

The third case was 1968 and much more startling. As late as the summer of Trudeau-Stanfield confrontation would have seemed highly improbable. Mr. Stanfield at that time had never served a day in the federal Parliament

more or less forgotten with the deparportant, an election in 1972 or next year at latest is bound to be different and less novel. The two leaders have now been out of their cellophane packages for more than four years. As preparations go forward for the return match, both are well-known everywhere in Canada Mr. Trudeau must stand on his record as Prime Minister and Mr. Stanfield will be appraised on the basis of his record as principal Opposition critic. No one will be excited by the attraction of a novel situation although any election is a potential producer of other excitements, depending on issues and campaign events.

PIERRE TRUDEAU ... no cellophane and was only one among many in the Conservative field. Mr. Trudeau, a comparatively recent adherent to the Liberal party, had been a few months a ritinister but was not well known outside his nafrontrunners for the succession to Lester Pearson; indeed was not considered by most observers a runner at all. Within a matter of months, however, these two new and untested personalities were thrust upon the attention of a fascinated public by dramatic. Americanstyle national conventions televised for audiences from coast to coast. From the outset, it was a contest of personalities, the Pearson record being

U.S. Similarity

In the United States, although the record rarely disappears in such remarkable fashion, contests resembling the Canadian fight of 1968 are quite common. The Presidential convention goes back to 1832. It may serve to introduce personalities, such as Wendell Willkie. who are quite new to the federal stage. It commonly pits one new contender against another; Abe-Lincoln debating with Stephen Douglas or, to cite recent examples, Eisenhower versus Adlai Stevenson, Kennedy versus Nixon, Johnson versus Barry Goldwater.

There has been concern among some politicians about the implications of a federal election in Canada coinciding, more or less, with a national election in the United States. The record does suggest that our Prime Ministers have been wary in this respect; they have preferred dates well in advance of U.S. elections when Canadian campaigns occurred in American Presidential years.

In this they probably based themselves on the example of Mr. King. Why it should have been so influential is no concern was obviously not shared by Mr. King's great predecessor Sir Wilfrid Laurier. He chose the election date on four occasions, in 1900, 1904, 1908 and 1911. The first three were in U.S. Presidential years and the dates were, respectively, November 7, November 3 and October 26. He won all three. In 1911 he departed from this pattern and lost. Among his defeated lieutenants, oddly, considering his future influence on election timing, was Mackenzie King, more than one million season and daily "visas" required for entry to pavilions had been sold this summer. Last season, when no visas were required but individual exhibits charged admission fees, total attendance was estimated by city hall at more than seven million. Of the people who visited the Expo islands in 1971, slightly more than 2.8 million visits were made to the various pavilions.

Even-so, this season's attendance figures are highly suspect. Only a week ago, Man and his World officials were declining to reveal turnstile counts, referring instead to the sale of visas which they said had passed the one-million mark in mid-August.

Not Too Accurate

"The turnstile count might not be too accurate," noted one fair official last week. "You can't count the kids who may run back and forth through the gates a dozen times a day."

The visas, which cost $2 for a one-day visit and $3 for the season, are purchased after passing through the turn-

When I visited Man and His World one afternoon last week, two youngsters were busily revolving one of the turnstiles - pushing up the atuomatic count while a security guard looked on.

In fairness to Mayor Drapeau, reduced attendance this year is due, in part, to a strike by civic blue-collar workers early this summer. Man and His World couldn't open until July 20, three weeks later than originally scheduled. The strike also caused a reduction in the size of the fair. One of the two Expo islands, Ile Notre Dame, was closed off and the number of national pavilions reduced from 21 in 1971 to only 11 this season. There is a total of only 21 pavilions this summer, compared with about 70 a year ago.

However, given that the fair was closed for only three weeks because of the strike, the reduced attendance down more than 80 per cent from last year - is also apparently due to waning interest. Stated more directly, Montrealers and tourists are apparently

Man Bored by His World

This conclusion was borne out, albeit unwittingly, by Man and His World's publicity department this summer. In reducing the size of the fair, it was suggested, the less interesting pavilions had been eliminated, what was left was the cream of the crop, so to speak, and Montrealers and tourists alike.

This simply hasn't happened.

Some of the notoriously bad pavilions from 1971, such as certain national exhibits which had bars dispensing the national drink and little else, have been eliminated. However, a number of pavilions are still most notable for their oversized postcards which adorn the walls.

There are some exceptions, like the Chinese pavilion, which has some fine paintings, tapestries and other works of art. However, it's hardly the kind of thing to create mass public excitement. or interest a family bringing young chil-

MAYOR DRAPEAU . . . still optimistic

Other exhibits, like the Road and Track pavilion, are downright ghastly and might more appropriately be called Man and His Parking Lot. It's billed in a ress handout as an exhibit of "special hard-to-get motor cars," but the fair's parking lot probably has more interesting vehicles on a busy weekend. However, if Montrealers are ignoring the fair in its sixth season, they're paying dearly for the dubious privilege.

Man and His World's deficit last season was approximately $12 million, of which $5 million was covered by the Quebec government. This year's deficit is expected to equal or exceed last year's figure, partially because of revenue lost during the blue-colfar strike and becauseof reduced attendance.

Quebec has agreed to absorb $4.5 mil-

Mayor Drapeau has defended the costly summer extravaganza, claiming that it is a valuable contribution to Montreal's economic life and that it attracts Commenting on last year's deficit, Mr. Drapeau noted this year that Man and His World created direct economic activity amounting to $38 million a year. His Worship arrived at this figure by adding the city's fair budget of $20 million, the $15 million in business done by concessionaires last summer, and $3 million spent on buses, taxis and the subway reaching the fair.

Using a well-established formula for calculating the effect of money thus set in circulation, Mr. Drapeau multiplied by three and concluded that Man and His World had an annual economic impact of nearly $120 million.

In addition, he noted, the fair produced about 6,000 part-time jobs last.

Qualifying Elements

Against the mayor's arguments, however, there are other considerations.

If the $20 million spent by the city on the fair were channelled instead into slum clearance and construction of lowrental housing, for instance, it would still constitute direct economic activity. Even if the city spent only the amount of its fair deficit last year, about $7 million on shared-cost public works projects sponsored by Ottawa or Quebec - the economic impact would have been significant. It also would have had a long-lasting effect on life in Canada's largest me-

As for the $15 million of business done concessionnaires on the site, it is highly likely that a large portion of the money, - if not all of it - would have been spent by the same people on entertainment within the city, in bars, restaurants, ball parks, etc.

As for the fair's effectiveness as a tourist attraction, this year's low attendance figures tell their own story

From a talk by ANDRE FORTIER, director of the Canada Council, in Montreal, August 28, to representatives of 39 United States and Canadian orchestras.

It's an indictment of our Canadian society that more post-secondary institutions don't have orchestras in which young people can learn the art of ensemble playing. To my knowledge only two Canadian universities support students' orchestras. And this is not good.

So what do we propose? We propose that schools should musically orient themselves towards student ensemble work and that those in charge should introduce the young people not only to the more traditional kinds of music but also to the work of contemporary composers, and particularly of composers in our own

I put this as an appeal rather than a promise. The Canada Council can help through such subsidized organizations as the National Youth Orchestra and the Association of Canadian Orchestras. The main thrust however must come from educators and dusicians Canada Council has particular reason to be interested in community involve-ment in music and all the performing arts because our country is sparsely po pulated and many of our citizens have not had the least exposure to the arts. We also share with many artists in the United States the wish to involve more people in the cities with the arts. That's why we would like to see our orchestras perform more often in smaller units.

A symphony orchestra, for example can at times separate into ten groups and play for 10 times as many people. I confess that we have encountered some resistance to this scheme because some musicians - and you can correct me here are like members of a Scottish clan. They want to stick together. I guess what I am saying is that greater flexibility would be salutary .

We are convinced in Canada Council that symphony orchestras should look ahead to the structures they want to be and actually must be - in the future This is particularly true in regard to their governing boards.

In a study we made in early 1971 we found that the chief criticism to be directed at the present volunteer board system of control in virtually all our artistic organizations is that despite the provision of public support the system places control firmly in the hands of a minuscule portion of our total society. I know that many artists complain about the inefficiency of boards, but the present system has looked after some interests remarkably well. Symphony orchestras and opera ompanies particularly have tended to be privately run - that is by a board made up of social and business leaders who generally are the largest donors to the organization.

But today in Canada, and increasingly in the United States, governments are becoming even more deeply involved in funding. We will have to find ways to include not only community leaders, but the general public and musicians on boards. In short, tri-partite boards representing the producers of the product, the shareholders, of the product, and the users of the product must reflect the growing investment of government.

60 YEARS AGO

From the Times of August 31, 1912:

The well-known Australian emotional actress, Miss Dena Cooper, comes to the Empress theatre next week, supported by Walter Robinson and R. Sheldrick in a sketch entitled, "The Confession." This is a most dramatic playlet, offering good scope for the talents of the elever actress from the Commonwealth. The motif is exceptionally strong and consistent throughout, and the denouement is a complete surprise. Miss Dena Cooper has been referred to by eastern critics as the Olga Nethersole of vaudeville.

Model of new rabbinical college

"To build in Jerusalem, in that most beautiful of cities; is almost an act of arrogance," wrote Moshe Safdie some years ago.

But now he is building what will be the most promi nent 20th-century structure in the heart of the biblical old

"The boy-wonder of architecture," as some called Safdie, when, at the age of 27, he was catapulted to world fame by his "Habitat" at Montreal's Expo '67, has designed a new rabbinical college—the Yeshivat Portat Joseph - for which ground has just been broken opposite the Wailing Wall, the holiest shrine of the Jewish world.

In collaboration with local Jerusalem planners, Safdie is also working on the design for an imposing new Wailing Wall Plaza, as well as on plans for a new urban-development in the now messy Mamilla area just out-side the Jaffa Gate.

At a time when our brave new architecture, having cut its lifeline to history, seems hell-bent on suburbaniz ing old cities with high-speed freeways and high-rise buildings, one trembles at the thought of a brave new architect invading Jerusalem, the oldest and most human city of them all. It could be arrogance indeed.

Just what will happen at the Wailing Wall Plaza and the Jaffa Gate is still too early to tell. I can only tell you that these are key spots, and whatever will be done there will largely determine whether Jerusalem, not only as a most beautiful city but also as a symbol of western civilization, survives this befuddled age without damage to its soul. Being public places, their redevelopment is not only an artistic but, for better or worse, a political issue

Let us hope the politicians have learned since 1899, in the days of the Turkish Sultan, they destroyed the old ramparts next to the Jaffa Gate and filled in the ancient moat to provide for the triumphant entrance into the Old City of the German Kaiser Wilhelm II and his

But the design for the Yeshivat is settled and ap proved, give or take some minor changes that money matters may impose, and I don't hesitate to assert that it will be a great, a superb building.

At once as new as Habitat and as old as the Citadel of David, the Yeshivat promises to express, as Safdie wanted it, the spirit of Jerusalem. It will also be regarded, I am sure, as one of the first expressions of that intangible spirit of a new humanism for which so many thoughtful people seem to be groping. For a number of reasons, the old, dehumanizing spirit of reckless mechanization, that has made such a shambles of America's urban environment and threatens that of Europe and Japan, has as yet barely touched

Only a very few of its buildings, to be sure, do justice to the disciplined pride and determined energy of the new The most outstanding of these, in my view, is the Israel Museum, designed by the Israeli architects Alfred Mansfield and Dora Gadd. It is a complex of simple, cubic buildings that derives a most impressive magnificance not from architecture but from nature. The buildings are part of the hill and its olive grove and its all-around open view. The hill was boldly but sensitively landscaped by Isamu Noguchi into a most enchanting sculpture garden for the display of the fabulous Billy Rose collection. It is a delight

Equally delightful and so poetic that it barely skirts kitsch is the Shrine of the Book, the last major work of the Austrian-American architect and stage designer Fre derick John Klesjer. Its shifting white dome is symbolically shaped like the clay vessels that contained some of the famous Dead Sea Scrolls, discovered in the northern wilderness of Judah in 1948 and displayed in the underground vaults of the building.

From the museum terraces you can see the whole city, the beauty, the damage and the challenge.

Some damage is done by the new office buildings which, together with the architecturally disappointing Knesset, or parliament building, vintage 1966, form Israel's government centre. They are no more inspired than the human filing cabinets built at about the same time along Washinton's Independence Avenue

Nor far from this sprawling complex, a trio of all-toofamiliar luxury apartment towers is rising — incongrously, unnecessarily and insultingly marring the skyline. Insipid, building-block housing projects parade all over the hills. They are fearfully spread out, inviting ever more obiles, highways, traffic jams and Los Angeliza-

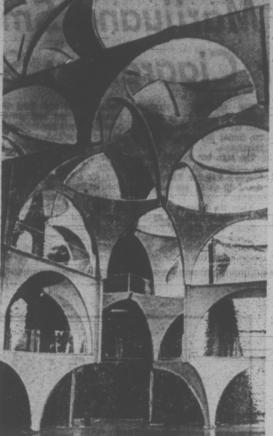

But so far the damage is mild. Nature and the mar-vellous Old City still predominate. The damage is mild, because so far there is so little new development, and what there is is mellowed by its color.

Some savior decreed long ago that anything built in Jerusalem must be built in Jerusalem stone, a pink-ochre limestone that seems to change color with the light. The ubiquitous stone blends old and new buildings into one glorious city, hiding all — well, almost all — architectural sins under a soft glow.

But the main reason, perhaps, why Jerusalem has so far maintained its aesthetic integrity, is that the city fa-

After the city was re-united under Israel in the Six-Day War in June, 1967, the planners started plotting a masterplan, replete with freeways; spaghetti interchanges highrise projects and conventional, le Corbusian wisdom. When it was all drawn up in December, 1970, Mayor Teddy Kollek proudly invited 30 prominent architects, city planners and critics from the United States, England, and other countries to review and presumably endorse it. They all said it was terrible and that, I hope, was the end of conventional, le Corbusian city planning wisdom for

The city now has the chance, at any rate, to let its future development be guided by the new thinking of a new neration of architects and urban designers. Moshe Safdie's Yeshivat is, I hope, the beginning

The various Israeli forces which took part in the capture of the Old City from Jordan met at the West Wall, as the Wailing Wall is now called, on June 7, 1967. Shortly afterward, a mess of slum houses was cleared to create a large square in front of it. This square now accommodates the thousands who come and worship, lamenting the destruction of Solomon's Temple more than 2,500

At the end of this new square is a cliff, and it is up that cliff, hill town fashion, that Safdie's building will

It is to house a sizable college with dormitories, classrooms, assembly halls, a dining room, chapel, swimming pool and a lot of other accommodations for so students. The steeply sloping half-acre site will also include a synagogue seating 430 people

Conventionally designed this would make a massive building complex, another gargantuan monument to the defeat of the human scale. But rather than simplifying and oversimplifying his spaces, as the "modern" school has taught, Safdie has broken them up into a deliberate and delightful complexity. His cubes and terraces tumble down the rock, much like the houses of Old City on either

And like the old townscape, Safdie's complex is entirened by arches and domes. Some of the domes will be transparent to catch and reflect the light, screened inside against the mid-day sun. Some will be transparent made of a white acrylic admitting only a milky glow into

The synagogue, whose interior consists of a composi-tion of stacked-up arches, will have thick glass prisms built into the roof. They will break up the changing light into rays of prismatic colors that will flood the interior walls with their radiance. To judge from the model on which Safdle experimented with this novel idea, the effect is that of a giant stained glass kalaidoscope. is that of a giant stained-glass kaleidoscope

Like many of the cloisters, churches and places in the Old City the complex is confined within a thick stone wall. But here its 10-foot width contains all the mechanical equipment, all the plumbing and wiring a modern structured demands.

Safdie was born in Israel in 1938. With his parents he emigrated to Canada, and his headquarters are still in Montreal. When he first returned to his native land in 1967, he wrote of his dream of building in Jerusalem wanted to build something that was wholly contemporary an expression of life today, but that would be as if it had always been there - a kind of fugue with two instruments, a counterpoint on a remembered melody. The Yeshivat will be wholly contemporary, an should evoke what Jung called "the collective scious." It will look as if it had always been there.

The design is movel and ingenious, perhaps even touched by genius. Arrogant it is not.

The CIA Tries Some Censorship

By ROGER WILKINS The Washington Post

A funny thing happened to author Alfred W. McCoy on the way to his publication date. He and his publisher, Harper and Row, almost got spooked by the CIA in a gambit that does little credit to U.S. secret overseas opera-

It seems that in his book, The Politics of Heroin in Southeast Asia," McCoy argues that American diplomats and secret agents have been significantly involved in the narcotics traffic in the "golden triangle" of Laos, and Burma. CIA, upon learning something of the content of the book, apparently decided that it had cause for the expression of

As a result, the author alleges, the agency resorted to "extra-legal measures" such as CIA visits to the publisher. telephone calls and letters in an attempt "to harass and intimidate me and my publish-

I am not concerned with the accuracy of McCoy's text or his methods of scholarship. I do, however, wonder about the way in which the government expressed its interest in his work.

Whether there were visits to the publisher or phone calls, as McCoy alleges, is not the point. It is clear that the general counsel of the CIA wrote and asked to see the prior to publication. he denied that the agency's interest affected in any way the publisher's right to publish, the general counsel went on to apply some heavy pressure, saying "it is our belief that no reputable publishing house would wish to publish such allegations without being assured that the sup-porting evidence was valid."

. Harper and Row, for its part, told the agency that it desired to publish the book but also to "live up to the traditions and responsibilities of a great publishing house as we see them." Overriding the authe publisher decided to submit the book for an unusual pre-publication review by the CIA.

A source at Harper and Row reports that the agency wrote the firm saying that it could 'prove beyond doubt" that McCoy's facts were wrong After reviewing the book, the agency attempted, in an 11-page critique, to demonstrate that the author's evidence did not support his as-sertions. Apparently, after reviewing the CIA critique,

Harper and Row decided the agency had not proved its case. "They just didn't do it," the source reports. So, the book will see the light of Unfortunately, this is neither the government's nor the CIA's first venture into the murky business of attempting to impose pre-publication re-straints on the words and country are to read and consider. The justice depart-ment's thrust against the Pen-tagon Papers is still fresh in memory. And the CIA has a a rich history in this business. In recent years, the agency has flitted from Random House to Putnam to court-rooms and to Harper and Row trying to influence what the rest of us do or don't read about the CIA.

But the agency cannot have both ways. It cannot hide away in the woods when it pleases and then tell the mirrors of the world what to show when it becomes edgy.

Its message to Harper and Row was especially per-nicious. While disclaiming any intention to inhibit publication, the agency suggested more than once that no reputable or responsible publisher would want to publish a book without first validating the

And then the agency offered itself as chief validator. I am not sure whether the publisher needed to go as far as submitting the galley proofs of the book to the CIA for prepublication review in order to ascertain the agency's views or whether, indeed, that decision was entirely wise. But to its credit, Harper and Row resisted the pressures and retain the ultimate publishing

That is all to the good, for the CIA, in offering its services as ultimate validator of the author's source material, was dangling a lure that leads down the path to acquiescence in censorship.

Finally, the responsibility rests with the publisher, it cannot and should not be shifted to any other party, particularly not to a secret agency of the government.

Tailgating is one of the major. causes of accidents in this province. Now there is a simple new rule to help you maintain a proper safety margin. It's called "The 2 Second Rule". All you have to do is leave two seconds between you and the car in front. Learn it now, and live.

These detailed projects of the scope of audio-visual com-munications were outlined by Ranald Ide, chairman of the government-financed authority which is taking the first step this fall to make videotape programs available to every Canadian.

'AVAILABLE TO SCHOOLS

Starting in September, the schools and other educational institutions in the province which have their own VTR equipment an order-by-cata-logue service of 1,000 educational programs at a one-time cost to the institution of 10 cents a minute and $1 handling costs.

The institution borrowing a half-inch color copy of the program master, which is stored in the OECA's Toronto tape and film library, also pays for the tape—an average cost of about $11 for a 30-min-ute tape—but when the taped the tape—out when the taped the tape can be returned to the authority and the $11 refunded. The tape can then be wiped off and used again.

"All of a sudden visual programming has become accessible because the cost of a taped program now is proba-bly less than the cost of a book," said Mr. Ide.

Making television programming accessible is a prime-function of the authority, created by an act of the Ontario legislature in 1970 and charged with the development of all technology as it relates to education.

The authority operates its own television channel in To-ronto, and has a provincial network made up of CBC, CTV and private television stations throughout Ontario which broadcast OECA programs on weekday mornings for classroom watching. This network is being expanded this year by the authority making available free to cable province 10 hours daily of educational programming.

All of this mass distribution still limits the accessibility of the programs to individuals to the programs to individuals to specific time-periods.

So now, the authority is introducing VIPS (videotape program service).
Ideally, VIPS can provide people with the programs they want to see when they want to see them. At the start, it will be a majority of the educational institutions of Ontario to which VIPS will be available, but the program, is deable, but the program is designed to spread to other institutions, such as libraries, and eventually into individual

"In future contracts, knowing that this now is a viable operation, we'll make provisions for clearing the rights and it won't present so many

.The authority has allocated $200,000 for clearing the rights $200,000 for clearing the rights and all other costs incurred in launching the VIPS program. Catalogues of the programs available, printed at a cost to the authority of about 60 cents a copy, are being sent out free to all Ontario educational institution sealthough at nt only about 79 per cent

Approximately 98 per cent of the elementary schools and 95 per cent of the secondary schools, however, have at least one television set, and in many communities the school boards have VTR me

Mr. Ide estimated that rights to about 1,000 OECA programs would be cleared for the start of the VIPS project, with the remainder of the authority's current stockpile of 8,000 programs cleared within another year.

Meanwalls, the authority is expanding its library at the rate of "about 500 programs a year," acquiring them from educational television libraries all over the world,

At the same time, a team of OECA people is working on indexing programs, which, Mr. Ide said, "in the long run is the most difficult problem" programs. These should ready by next January or ready by next January or February, and then they'll test it and find out how useful it is.

"I would expect that by 1975
we'll have the index system perfected. There is no other country in the world that is tackling this problem of in-dexing."

Share Deal Bared

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Sun says Newmont Mining Corp. of New York has purchased a 22-per-cent interest in British Columbia's highly successful Bethlehem Copper Corp. Ltd. from a Japanese mont paid $29.4 million for 1.4 million Bethlehem shares held by Sumitomo Metal Mining

About 50 per cent of Bethle-hem shares are held domestically and the Granges com-pany of Sweden is a 25-percent owner.

Bethlehem stock stood $21 on the Toronto Stock Exchange when the Sun said the deal was closed Tuesday.

The company is considered one of the best run in Canadian mining. Since going into production in 1964, it has had after-tax profits totalling $48.5 million and at the end of its ing capital of nearly $37 million and assets of $60 million.

The Sun said the block of Sumitomo shares was first offered in Canada and that the newly-formed Canada Development Corporation turned it down because Bethlehem's next major surge in earnings is at least three years ago.

The newspaper said sources in Tokyo had attributed the Sumitomo sale to the Japanese firms year-end statement due Sept. 30, described as depressing:

Announcing CPAir's simpler, lower Executive Jet fares.

In its simplest terms, here's what we are going to do to Executive Jet airfares on October 1st:

1. Long haul fares will be reduced by 7% to 9%. These reductions are applicable to Economy and First Class fares on all flights over 1250 miles, and even those like Youth fares that already enjoy reductions.

2. Short haul fares will not be increased by CP Air.

3. Family Plan fares will be reduced, too, and will apply every day, even weekends.

4. An additional 30% reduction will be offered on a new 8-30 day Excursion fare from October 1 to May 31. Applies every day, including weekends and CP Air will even waive minimum stay requirements if you complete your return trip in one weekend.

5. Youth Standby fares will be a full 40% lower than even the new Economy fares. Without weekend restrictions.

6. Senior Citizens can now get confirmed reservations at 20% less than Economy. A one-third discount will still be offered on a standby basis. Still without weekend restrictions.

7. Group fares for 15 or more will be 20% lower than the new Economy fares. Applies every day, including weekends, and group members can now travel separately for one half of the return trip.

8. Remember — Family Plan, Excursion, Youth, Senior Citizens' and Group fares apply every day, including weekends.

Your CP Air travel agent has all the details. But the net result is less money and less restrictions all round.

These are two more ways that we're making it more pleasant for you to get where you're going.

We may not be number one in flight frequency, but we think that quality counts for more than quantity with you.

The young man's name is Bill Smart, and he is a law student at UBC. He spent the last four years of his Munich apprenticeship at Washington on a track scholarship.

He runs that type of a race, he runs it well, and it isn't likely he will be stampeded into accepting the dare to go to the front with the speed burners. He's too Smart for that.

Smart will likely run in both the 800 and 1,500, and it won't be easy. He'll have to do his very best even to get into the finals. But still, he should be right there when the final call

Then last year at Cali, in Colombia, at the Pan-Am Games,

Smart was in the final of the 1,500. He almost did the same thing. He came from far back to catch everybody but one pretty good runner. Marty Liquori of the U.S. was the only fellow he couldn't overtake.

Liquori won't be there this time, but there are a few others who may cause Smart some problems.

One is Kip Keino, the Olympic champion, and another is Jim Ryun, the world record holder at 3:33.1.

They will have to be beaten. Keino, it says, will have to be

There are a couple of other Canadians who deserve some

One is 16-year-old Glenda Resier of Ottawa. She took up

It would be nice too, if Debbie Brill and Debbie Van

The increases were announced jointly by NHL pres-ident Clarence Campbell and Alan Eagleson, executive director of the NHLPA.

The new playoff and orderof-finish awards agreement replaces one announced uni-laterally by the NHL last March. At that time the league, without approval from the players association, in-creased the total award package to $966,000.

Players on second-place teams receive $2,000 each, an increase from $1,250; on thirdplace teams $1,250, up from $750, and on fourth-place

The playoff award money now is distributed so that

Other little touches include Vega's hidden windshield antenna when you order a factory installed radio. A battery with sealed side-terminals that protect against corrosion,

No other domestic car has ever grey-haired man of 78, but who first came to me around 1917, when he was a tall, thin, gangling youth. He told me then that his abdomen felt uncomfortable every day, he has aches and pains all over his body, and felt weak and ill all the time. He was much distressed by four severe colds a year. distressed by four severe colds a year. He complained of an irritable heart, a troublesome colon, a great sensitiveness to emotion and almost constant feelings of fatigue.

Naturally, I immediately examined him thoroughly from head to foot, and could not find any signs of organic disease such as could have been demonstrated by a surgeon or a pathologist's report or an autopsy. By this time I had come to suspect strongly that there are a number of people who are constitutionally inadequate to stand up to the strains of living each day, and that "constitutional inadequate and the strains of living each day," and that "constitutional inadequate to stand up to the strains of living each day," and that "constitutional inadequate to stand up to the strains of living each day, and that "constitutional inadequate to stand up to the strains of living each day," and that "constitutional inadequate to stand up to the strains of living each day," and that "constitutional inadequate to stand up to the strains of living each day, and that "constitutional inadequate to stand up to the strains of living each day," and that "constitutional inadequate to stand up to the strains of living each day, and that "constitutional inadequate to stand up to the strains of living each day," and that "constitutional inadequate to stand up to the strains of living each day, and that "constitutional inadequate to stand up to the strains of living each day," and that "constitutional inadequate to stand up to the strains of living each day, and that "constitutional inadequate to stand up to the strains of living each day," and that "constitutional inadequate to stand up to the strains of living each day, and that "constitutional inadequate to stand up to the strains of living each day," and that "constitutional inadequate to stand up to the strains of living each day, and that "constitutional inadequate to stand up to the strains of living each day," and the strains of living each day are the strains of living each day and the strains of living stitutional inadequacy" is an actual "syndrome" (group of symptoms) that can be recognized and that constitute a specific health physician Sir William Osler said. As I saw hundreds of constitutionally inadequate persons over the years and took careful family histories, I began to see that in every case, the person had told me of some nervously

The patient who just wrote me told me back in 1917 of his frail, thin, sickly mother, and his beloved sister who had spent some time in a mental hospital with a spell of insanity. What much interests me now is that recently, when I saw my old patient, he told me that with all his dozens of illnesses he had kept working and earning his living, and so I am proud of him. He had never had any big serious illness.

About the worst thing that happened to my patient was that after I left California, where I had first seen him, and he went to other doctors, some surgeons who did not know the nature of his trouble operated on his abdomen, hoping and expecting to find some serious disease in an organ, but no one could find anything wrong. He has never married because, like so many of these men, he felt that anyone who has to keep spending so much time taking care of his health will not have any time left over-for a

But the fact that the man has lived for 78 years without get ting a single demonstrable organic disease, like an ulcer or a cancer, is good proof that all his troubles were due to nerves

Island Biologist Defends Trout-Stocking Policies

Vancouver Island regional fisheries biologist George Reid was quick to respond to a recent column on trout-stocking programs. In the column, I questioned whether Vancouver Island was receiving its fair shair of hatchery production, particularly when the quantities listed in the fish and wildlife branch's monthly report fell far short of what many other provincial regions were receiving. I also suggested that stocking lakes with a possible feed source may be a necessary prerequisite to any major trout-stocking program.

Below, in part, is Reid's reply to that column

Dear Barry:

In your column you criticized the Fish and Wildlife Branch, and in particular our region, for not receiving its full share of the hatchery trout production. I suggest you criticism is completely unwarranted.

As you pointed out the things taken into consideration-included fishing pressure, access and lake productivity. Each of these must be integrated if a stocking program is to be successful. If you analyze each point individually you may be able to understand why Vancouver Island is rather conservative compared to other regions.

How many times have you tried to gain access to one of your favorite fishing spots and found the forest company gates locked? Access to many of our best lakes is cut off during most of the fishing season. Regional supervisor Charlie Lyons and I have discussed this at some length and we both agree that lakes with restricted access should not be stocked.

On Vancouver Island, less than five per cent of our lakes are heavily fished. These are presently receiving periodic fish plantings. As Ed Vernon, chief of fisheries, indicated in his statement on hatcheries, fishing pressure is a necessary prerequisite to stocking.

Included in my spring stocking list was the Third Nanaimo Lake which is subject to restricted access and little fishing pressure. You could validly criticize me for stocking this lake. There are certain circumstance upon which I based my decision. First, Crown Zellerbach have constructed a number of floats so children could safely fish. They also removed the accumulated logging debris from the outlet which had previously blocked spawning fish. To get a spawning population established for a children's fishery we decided to stock. This lake will become a "children's only" fishery in next year's regula-

I realize in the interior of British Columbia there are lakes entirely dependent on hatchery production for the angling they provide. These lakes have little or no spawning area. On Vancouver Island most of the lakes have adequate spawning areas.

Lsuggest where spawning is limited habitat improvement work is a viable alternate to stocking. I recognize there are lakes with no spawning area available. Where these occur, and provided the access is adequate, we will stock them on a regular

The lakes of Vancouver Island are among the most unproductive in British Columbia. This is due mainly to a lack of nutrients in the water. Nutrients are necessary to stimulate plant growth which in turn affects the entire food chain including fish food organisms and fish. As you mentioned in your column there is a shortage of fish food organisms in Vancouver Island waters. To simply introduce these organisms into an ecosystem does not necessarily mean increased food supply available to fish. If the nutrients are not available to the system the alien. food organisms will probably, die, or survive in such low numbers that they become insignificant in the diet of fish. A given body of water will only support a given number of fish.

There are a number of ecological consideration to take into account before stocking takes place. Such things as species interaction, competition, food availability, and genetic effects should all be evaluated before any lake is considered for stocking. You have continually stressed in your column the need for ecological planning. Do you think stocking fish is good ecologi-

Most studies have shown when high natural mortality of trout is considered, wild populations of fish contribute more to the angler than those which are stocked. Some studies have shown that hatchery fish are poorly adapted to compete and survive with residual wild populations hence there is a high mortality among the stocked fish What I suggest is that where resident trout populations are already present stocking should be carefully evaluated.

I should point out that we have started a complete stocking evaluation of lakes on Vancouver Island but this will take up to

Because of the physical and biological constraints I have briefly outlined I believe a conservative approach must be taken in any stocking program and a proper evaluation be made. It's going to take time.

World's Largest Underground Iron Mine Supports a City

KIRUNA, Sweden (CP) "The whole city lives directly or indirectly by the mine," says Torsten Goransson in explaining the development of Kiruna. "But we have enough ore to last another 100 years. What will happen to Kiruna after the ore runs out is anyone's guess.

Lying 100 miles north of the Arctic Circle and covered by darkness and winter for most of the year, this land of the Laplanders and the setting sun experiences an uneasy isolation from more active Swedish life to the south.

Kiruna is essentially a min ing town, rooted to the world's largest underground from ore mine that surfaces its waste into what Goransson, the managing director, calls beautiful terraced lines through mechanized dumping. In fact they are man-made mountains of greyish-black waste, easy on the eyes' against a dull summer horizon because of the smooth pattern of terraces fitting neatly into the general mountain con-

"The mine is not permitted to use women underground. What can you do?"

Kiruna boasts one of Sweden's finest town halls, of a size and beauty that might make it more fitting for a federal parliament.

Filled with examples of local handierafts and tapestries, the huge hall houses a council of 45 members who decide the affairs of the com-

"We are dependent on the mine but we are not con-trolled by the mine." the

In fact, the councillors like to emphasize that Kirung is ity of 21,000. Its legal boundaries cover all of the county of Norbotten, roughly onequarter of Sweden with a total population of 260,000 reaching to the borders of Norway and mits are required in these border crossings with the councillor proudly noting that relations rival Canada and the Unites States as "the most peaceful border in the world."

But this easy border travel, doesn't settle the job problem.

The city fathers feel the best they can do for their youngs. The city fathers is to give them a fine education. The councillor put it this way.

"The miner says to his son: You don't have to be a miner underground iron ore mine in when you grow up. You will the world, owned 95 per cent have very good schools. But a good job."

For the youngster the break with Kiruna is not easy. So the mine is the centre of job attraction. It declares it has the finest mechanization, the cleanest tunnels and a great ore production rate, about 21 million tons a year, shipped as far as Japan.

"Sweden has been for many decades the leading exporter of iron ore in the world," says Goransson as he continues to lead visitors down through the well-lighted road tunnels. "Other countries now have passed Sweden Canada, Australia. Brazil—but our com-pany is still the biggest exporting company of the world and Kiruna has the biggest by the Swedish state:

THANK YOU, MR. LOR

"Of all the vehicles I've ever owned, I am very pleased to say that my Mazda is the best I've ever driven — and I've driven almost every type of car and truck ever built.

That's a quote from a letter from Larry Loring of New Westminster, equipment operator and amateur prospector. We didn't ask him to write it; we didn't pay him for it. It's just one of those nice things that happen when you make a vehicle as good as the Mazda 1800 Pick-Up.

Mr. Loring bought his Mazda in November, 1970. And he has worked it hard ever since - winter and summer. with and without his camper for 36,000 miles

... on the main highways and especially on very steep. almost impassable side roads to reach mining claims I have staked.

His verdict: ... we were amazed at the superior performance."

Here are some of the things Larry Loring likes about the Mazda 1800 Pick-Up:

.. ruggedly built ... terrific gas mileage ... very comfortable ... fine performance when empty or loaded . . . plenty of room in the cab. . . easy shifting ..."

And as you can see from the photograph, Mr. Loring's Mazda still looks in great shape after almost two years of hard work.

So what more can we say? Except to invite you to see and test drive the Mazda 1800 Pick-Up.

Larry Loring signs his letter .. a completely satisfied customer." We think you will be, too.

Pleiades undergoes engine trials on Gorge at Kinsmen Park

Floating Home One Escape From 'Mortgage Trap'

Dee Spragg relaxes at home, aboard trimaran

Times Staff

When Rob and Dee Spragg moved from Victoria to Vancouver recently, they took their home — powered by a seven and a half horsepower motor — with them.

Home, for the Spraggs, is a 31-foot fibreglass trimaran, named Pleiades. It's also a project which they've undertaken completely by themselves, from the moulding of the boat's three hulls to the installation of its

Into the bargain, Pleiades has been the Spraggs' place of residence for more than a

It's a fuxurious home, but it hasn't always been that way. Last winter, for instance, the couple found themselves without electricity or running water. They installed a wood stove in their sleeping quarters, but even that didn't stop early morning temperatures dipping as low as 28 deg. F on some occasions.

"Getting out of bed was a real traumatic experience at that time," said Spragg.

Later, at a time when the Pleiades v "tied up to some trees near Parsons Bridge," the mooring lines slipped one night and the young couple woke to find themselves drifting out into busy Esquimalt Harbor.

The Spraggs began looking for a large sailboat in Victoria three years ago, but decided they couldn't afford the asking prices for the kind of boat they wanted. A newspaper ad offering trimaran moulds set them off on their boatbuilding career. "We were clueless about construction before we began," Spragg admits. began," Spragg admits.

Some $2,000 and endless busy evenings later, the Spraggs decided they weren't getting on fast enough, so Spragg quit his job as a photogrammetrist (photographic surveyor) with the B.C. government to work solely on the boat, and his wife turned breadwinner.

For two years now, Mrs. Spragg has been

"Rob mentioned building a trimaran on our first date (five years ago)," she says.

But Mrs. Spragg has a domestic arrange ment that would be the envy of many a land-locked housewife. There's a kitchen stove with three burners, oven and broiler, double stainless steel sinks and cupboard space galore. Bilges serve as refrigerators when the boat is sailing in colder waters. Running water is on tap from a 25-gallon bow tank and there's another 30 gallons in reserve.

The boat can sleep as many as seven says Mrs. Spragg, "so long as they don't all decide to get up at the same time."

But it'll be three for the trimaran, as far as the Spraggs are concerned. (The thirdmember is George, a pedigree male Bur-

To date, the couple has spent sol500 on this floating home. It'll take them another $2,000 for mast and salls, an amount they hope to raise by the spring of 1973, with Spragg going back to work in Vancouver.

Eventually, when the Pleiades is rigged for ocean travel, the Spraggs will be heading for New Zealand.

Spragg says more and more people are building their own large sailing boats as an alternative to the "nine to five and a mortgage" routine. In the three years he and his wife have worked on their boat, they have met many other people in their late 20s and 30s who have sold their own homes to raise cash for a sailboat to live on.

The only drawback in this part of the world, he says, is that there are hardly any "civilized" places where local authorities "civilized" places where local authorities will allow you to live on your own boat.

American Look Makes Return To Fashion

For almost a century now, the American Way of Dressing has been making a comeback every 20 years or so.

It began when the Gibson Girl's shirtwaist and skirt put stays and bustles out of the fashion picture. The term the "American Look" was coined in 1941 to describe clothes like popover dresses and Adrian suits, and became a continuous international influence. international influence.

All this Americana is now back, as part of the 1972 fall

Fall daytime clothes are simple, impeccably tailored, yet infinitely detailed. Evening clothes are luxurious, without any "casual" overtones. When there is a sweater top on an evening skirt, it is in rich cashmere. The long cashmere sweater slink with a matching cardigan lopped around the shoulders will be this year's informal look.

Coats are the great talking point of the season. The variety in shapes, in lengths, and the enriched look of fluffy, downy, velvety fabrics make a wonderful, roomy coat something every woman will crave. The strict little princesse coat with high armholes is fading fast.

Where colors are concerned, the latest contrast is lacquer red against emerald green. They come together repeatedly in plaids, checks, stripes, in small daytime prints and huge flow-Fall daytime clothes are simple, impeccably tailored, yet

This is a year of only one insistent pattern — plaid.

CANBERRA (AP) - AUStralia's external territories minister will fly soon to the isolated Cocos Islands in the Indian Ocean to investigate a report that native Malay workers are paid only $2.20 a week and treated like slaves.

Vancouver Players Praised

EDINBURGH (CP) - The Western Canada Theatre Company from Vancouver was praised by a critic in The Scotsman newspaper today for what he termed "a good performance by a polished cast" in the play Luv.
Luv, written by Murray

Schisgal of New York, was popular on Broadway in the 1960s.

The Canadian group produced it here as part of the "fringe" activities connected with the current Edinburgh Festival of the Arts. The reaction to its efforts came from critic David Mercer.

First Year Experimental In Starting Greenhouse

With less hours of work, the man or woman on a salary has the opportunity to indulge in greenhouse gardening even though the outdoor version has little or no appeal.

Never before has it been possible to own and operate a glass structure so easily, for labor-saving aids for heating, shading, watering and ventilating have been devised to remove much of the physical time-taking work.

Yet the thrill remains of watching the growth in seedlings and cuttings of exotic plants, and the production of handsome foliage plants with unusual flowers during the duller winter

Knowing many of these hobby greenhouses have been built this summer I think the owners will want to get started built this summer I think the owners will want to get started on growing something right away.

The first year or two should be considered as experimental, for no matter how automatic the operating of the house may be, you still must get the feel of it.

Particularly is this so if an assortment of unrelated plants is attempted. Since this is the usual pattern followed by most of us in the beginning, the wise among us will start with easily-acquired, inexpensive plants, or some which cannot fall.

The first fact to be apparent is that any pot plant which does moderately well in the dwelling house will look even better when put into the greenhouse.

ter when put into the greenhouse.

The factors of overhead light and less dry air are responsible in most cases. It is certainly true that plants are much more easily cared-for on benches above an earth floor than on polished tables with rugs and hardwood floors below.

A few pots of outdoor spring bulbs are an easy project to start now — hyacinths, some crocuses and early varieties of daffodils or any of the narcissi which bloom early outdoors.

These hardy bulbs need the eight-week rooting period in cool shade buried outdoors, before going into the greenhouse.

With a night minimum and maximum of 40 Degrees F. many plants come into bloom four to six weeks ahead of outdoors.

Freesias are another fragrant flowered cormous plant for the winter-heated greenhouse to plant now; and the indoor cyclamens enjoy the comparative coolness and light even more than in the dwelling.

To become acquainted with growing plants in a green-house without additional expense, take up a half-dozen or so outdoor annuals which still have flower buds. As a suggestion try lobelia, ageratum, a short bushy zonal geranium, and a small plant of silver foliaged cineraria.

You may not have any of these, but they will suggest

So long as their root balls are put into suitably sized pots with drainage and good soil, they will serve as experimental plants for several months in your new greenhouse. You will have something alive and colorful depending on your care to make it worthwhile visiting the place whenever an opportuni-

The Bridge Expert

Contract bridge is known to be a game where tempers flare. Much more often than not, however, bridge arguments are settled amicably, although some caustic realthough some caustic remarks might be tossed about. Here is a case in point.

During a tournament, at one of the tables a man and a lady were having a terrible argument, with the man accusing the lady of having made a terrible bid on the preceding hand. The lady, in no uncertain terms, was counter-attacking with statements that the man really had no idea of correct bidding. After the blistering duel had been going on for a few minutes, the man said to the lady: "Would you like a cup of coffee?" She replied: "Yes, or coffee?" She replied: "Yes, thank you." The man left to procure the coffee.

One of the turned to the lady and in-quired: "Is that man your husband?" 13 What Shylock demanded of the French cast, maybe!

The lady's indignant response was spontaneous. "Of course: Do you think I'd live in sin with an idiot like that!" Here is the deal which precipitated the tiff. The lady was sitting South. Both sides vulnerable. North deals.

The man's attack was based on his wife's two-no-trump response on a hand containing the doubleton Q-8 of hearts. He maintained that she did not have the heart suit protected, as she was supposed to have for her bid. She maintained that all experts make this type of bid, and get away

She then counter-attacked with the observation that North should have rebid three clubs instead of three no-trump. The partnership, she pointed out, would then have arrived at a minor-suit game contract.

Each had a point. But if guilt must be assigned for the arrival at the wrong game contract, South would be at fault, for she made the initial mistake. This assignment of guilt is based on the following: the partner who makes the first error is adjudged to be the guilty one.

He's in the Government After 20 Years as MLA

By DONNA CLEMENTS Times Staff

DUNCAN - "I have waited a long time for this," Co-wichan-Malahat New Demo-cratic Party MLA Robert Strachan said continually throughout Wednesday evening as he watched his party become the government for the first time in the history of the province.

Strachan, 59, who has represented this constituency for the past 20 years and was Opthat time, set the tempo of ex-citement and wonder which filled his packed campaign headquarters as they watched long-time Social Credit cabinet ministers defeated.

"I knew people were switch-ig," he said. "But I didn't know to what extent."

With his total of 10,227 votes, Strachan won more votes than the remaining four candidates together. The other candidates, Social Credit Kay. Grouhel, Conservative Jim Quaife, Liberal Danny Clem-entes and Independent Ken Hasanen together managed to collect only 7,324 votes.

"This is the biggest victory in my career," Strachan said. "Especially with the change in this constituency's boundaries in 1966."

Strachan said that the northern portion of the constituency had been cut off and put in the Nanaimo area while in the south the Cowichan-Malahat constituency was made bigger. "Most of the people in that area are Social Credit," he said.

As Strachan watched the results streaming into head-quarters — with his always a long way in the lead — he would reach out and hug everyone nearby and soundly kiss women who worked hard on his campaign.

One of his greatest victories this constituency was in dysmith, where Social Ladysmith. Credit candidate Grouhel has been mayor for the past eight years. Strachan received 2.018 votes while Grouhel was supported by 548 people. Quaife got 183 while Clements won 64 and Hasanen none.

"I think the results speak or themselves," Strachan said. "I don't want to make any comments on my victory

As each new victory for the NDP party was announced a tremendously loud yell from supporters would shake the building and they would all run to grab Strachan once again in jubilation,

'The premier said he believes in miracles and by God there is one tonight," Stra-chan said.

"I was cautiously optimistic that we would do well because. I could sense this change in he said. But he appeared stunned by the extent

Strachan said that in the many constituencies he visited on Vancouver Island during the election campaign he was stopped by many people on the street who said "this ne I am going to vote

"I had the feeling that this would be the trend throughout B.C.." Strachan said.

Strachan said he has no idea what cabinet post Pre-mier-elect Dave Barrett will give him. "I wouldn't hazard a guess. We will just have to wait and see what happens." More cheers went up as

Nanaimo-Cowichan-the Islands NDP member of Parliament Tommy Douglas called Strachan early in the evening to congratulate him on his continually Well-wishers streamed in to shake Strachan's hand and hear his vic-tory speech not only for him-self but for his party as well.

"This proves that in the long run the little people can beat big money any time," he said. "I have waited for this many, many years and suffered many moments of frusration as I saw my party defeated in previous elections. Now that the moment has come I find myself inwardly calm."

Strachan asked the crowded room how it feels to now have MLA representing them

Researcher Befriends 'Underdog' Sea Cow

MONTREAL (CP) - Diana Magor says some of her best friends are sea-cows. So she plans to spend part of next winter doing whatever possible to save them from extinction.

She described the roly-poly creatures as "something like a big fat cigar" and the "underdogs of the marine world."

To be more specific, the sea-cows Diana is interested in weigh about 1,000 pounds as adults, have heavy, flat tails, two front flippers, are also known as South American manatees and live in the Amazon River.

Most important, said Diana, is the fact that after 50 million years sea-cows are an endangered species. Hence her trip to the Amazon this Nov-

Diana, currently working as Montreal restaurant, is a native of Galt, Ont., who origi-nally planned to be a doctor.

During pre-med studies, however, she took a course in scuba-diving and was sidetracked by the fascination of underwater life.

Since graduation, from Acadia University in Nova Scotia and Stanislaus College in California, Diana has worked at the Undersea Gardens in Victoria, collecting, caring for and displaying marine ani-mals. KWAKIUTL CRACKS IN ONTARIO SUN

BRAMALEA, Ont. (CP) - Southern Ontario weather has proved to be too much for Kwakiutl. The community's recently acquired cedar statue of a nude male, subject of controversy, has developed a crack in its back.

Carved in B.C. by Simon Charlie, the statue was unable withstand different weather conditions,

Robert Williams, reeve of Chinuacuousy township which purchased the statue for display in its new municipal development, said Kwakiuti's problems can be corrected quickly. The statue, carved without a fig leaf, sparked the ire of some local residents who felt it was obscene. Council-decided it wasn't and approved its installation. One civic official said it was probably the weight of the moral controversy, rather than the weather, which broke

Island Biologist Defends Trout-Stocking Policies

Vancouver Island regional fisheries biologist George Reid was quick to respond to a recent column on trout-stocking programs. In the column, I questioned whether Vancouver Island was receiving its fair shair of hatchery production, particularly when the quantities listed in the fish and wildlife branch's monthly report fell far short of what many other provincial regions were receiving. I also suggested that stocking lakes regions were receiving. I also suggested that stocking lakes with a possible feed source may be a necessary prerequisite toany major trout-stocking program

he

ach

In your column you criticized the Fish and Wildlife Branch, and in particular our region, for not receiving its full share of the hatchery trout production. I suggest you criticism is completely unwarranted

As you pointed out the things taken into consideration included fishing pressure, access and lake productivity. Each of these must be integrated if a stocking program is to be successful. If you analyze each point individually you may be able to understand why Vancouver Island is rather conservative compared to other regions.

How many times have you tried to gain access to one of your favorite fishing spots and found the forest company gates locked? Access to many of our best lakes is cut off during most of the fishing season. Regional supervisor Charlie Lyons and I have discussed this at some length and we both agree that vlakes with restricted access should not be stocked.

On Vancouver Island, less than five per cent of our lakes are heavily fished. These are presently receiving periodic fish plantings. As Ed Vernon, chief of fisheries, indicated in his statement on hatcheries, fishing pressure is a necessary prerequisite to stocking.

Included in my spring stocking list was the Third Nanaimo Lake which is subject to restricted access and little fishing pressure. You could validly crificize me for stocking this lake. There are certain circumstance upon which I based my decision. First, Crown Zellerbach have constructed a number of floats so children could safely fish. They also removed the accumulated logging debris from the outlet which had reviously blocked spawning fish. To get a spawning population established for a children's fishery we decided to stock. This lake will become a "children's only" fishery in next year's regulations.

I realize in the interior of British Columbia there are lakes entirely dependent on hatchery production for the angling they provide. These lakes have little or no spawning area. On Vancouver Island most of the lakes have adequate spawning areas. I suggest where spawning is limited habitat improvement work is a viable alternate to stocking. I recognize there are lakes with no spawning area available. Where these occur, and provided the access is adequate, we will stock them on a regular

The lakes of Vancouver Island are among the most unproductive in British Columbia. This is due mainly to a lack of nutrients in the water. Nutrients are necessary to stimulate plant growth which in turn affects the entire food chain including fish food organisms and fish. As you mentioned in your column there is a shortage of fish food organisms in Vancouver Island waters. To simply introduce these organisms into an ecosystem does not necessarily mean increased food supply available to fish. If the nutrients are not available to the system the alien food organisms will probably die, or survive in such low numbers-that they become insignificant in the diet of fish. A given body of water will only support a given number of fish.

There are a number of ecological consideration to take into account before stocking takes place. Such things as species interaction, competition, food availability, and genetic effects should all be evaluated before any lake is considered for stocking. You have continually stressed in your column the need for logical planning. Do you think stocking fish is good ecological planning?

Most studies have shown when high natural mortality of trout is considered, wild populations of fish contribute more to the angler than those which are stocked. Some studies have shown that hatchery fish are poorly adapted to compete and survive with residual wild populations hence there is a high mortality among the stocked fish What I suggest is that where resident trout populations are already present stocking should be carefully evaluated.

should point out that we have started a complete stocking evaluation of lakes on Vancouver Island but this will take up to
